56. bašilio, bashiliu, 八十六 (this is a Manchu-style name, which is why it would appear in this form, as opposed to the number 86, which would be translated as jakūnju ninggun).
57. baxi'u, bashiwu 八十五 (once again, a Manchu-style number-as-name. The trick here is that in writing this name, which belonged to a relatively high ranking official in the 18th century, scribes would add a tooth between the i and the u to mark the syllable barrier, reflecting the fact that iu is not a permissible letter combination. The correct reading can be identified because iau is also not a permissible letter combination, and inu would require a left dot).
